Life by the River

What is a Riparian Zone?
The riparian zone is the area of land adjacent to a river or stream. It is a critical part of the ecosystem, providing habitat for many plants and animals.

Why is it important?
Riparian zones provide food, water and shade for wildlife and are critical for maintaining healthy riparian ecosystems.

The Least Red's Vine (Lorain Vine)
The Least Red's Vine (Lorain Vine) is a rare plant species that grows in riparian zones. It is listed as a threatened species because it has a very high risk of extinction. The plant is native to the area and is an important part of the riparian ecosystem. The riparian zone is a critical part of the ecosystem and is essential for the recovery of the riparian zone.
